"[UNILATERAL] NO-FAULT DIVORCE IS OUR MOST DANGEROUS SOCIAL EXPERIMENT"

Twelve reasons to repeal unilateral no-fault divorce:

1. It fundamentally redefines marriage.
2. It abolishes marriage as a civil and legal institution.
3. It disincentivizes marriage, especially for men.
4. It legalizes adultery.
5. It forcibly alters a person's legal status without their participation or ability to defend themselves.
6. It enriches the state governments and the mercantile class.
7. It is an unprecedented interference by the state into private life.
8. It erodes public morality.
9. It stunts personality and identity formation (social development).
10. It encourages toxic individualism.
11. It is repugnant to Christian ethics and morality.
12. It is arguably unconstitutional.

Common arguments in favor of no-fault divorce and our response:

1. Two people should be able to mutually consent to a divorce.
   The issue is not about mutual no-fault, but is instead about unilateral no-fault.

2. Everyone bears responsibility for a divorce. We shouldn't assign blame to one party.
   The purpose of fault-based grounds is not merely to assign blame, but to stigmatize social behavior that is repugnant to society as a whole.

3. People shouldn't be forced to air their dirty laundry out in public court.
   Many Christians would rather that the civil government stay out of the business of marriage and divorce entirely. But since this is not the case, the legislature enacts public law that regulates marriage and divorce. Marriage is a public, not a private institution.

4. Domestic violence often cannot be proven, and if it could, women would fear retaliation.
   No-fault divorce was introduced in the 1960s and 70s at a time when smartphones were not invented yet. Any continuous habit of violence can easily be recorded today. There are also crimes for battery and assault in criminal law that can result in protection against retaliation.

5. Women often find themselves in abusive relationships & shouldn't be forced to stay.
   First, women should be more selective in who they marry to begin with. But, if the abuse occurs after marriage, there are grounds of cruelty and domestic violence available.

6. The state government shouldn't force people to stay married if a spouse wants out.
   Divorce requires a positive action by the state to dissolve a marriage. Therefore, the government is not forcing married couples to stay together. If anything, the state government under a no-fault regime is forcing a divorce. The state forces entire families to breakup and fragment on behalf of one party's subjective will.
